

Eva Fabry, Director of the European Centre for Women and Technology – ECWT, Norway

Eva Fabry is co-founder and since 2008 Director of the European Center for Women and Technology. She worked twenty years in diplomacy and thereafter as European Affairs Manager of Swedish and Norwegian public actors, latest at the Norwegian Regional Innovation Centre in Drammen, Norway with women and tech as an emerging idea for regional growth generation.

2009-2010 Eva was also Project Manager and responsible for delivering the European Directory of Women in ICT, endorsed by the European e-skills Alliance as the leading platform for women in technology in Europe.

Under Eva's leadership ECWT has grown from 16 founding members to the active involvement of 130+ multi-stakeholder-based organizations. ECWT's key priorities today are to attract more girls to coding, increasing digital literacy and girls and women's STEM careers; support to women's entrepreneurship and business start-ups; alternative financing of STEM businesses; gendered innovations research and supporting multicultural integration through innovative ICT tools.

Eva Fabry / ECWT is member of the Future Open Council of Mobile World Capital Barcelona's Digital Future Society (dFS) Think Tank. Eva is a frequent speaker on gender and STEM / ICT issues in the leading European and global conferences.