PÉCS

Due to its rich historical past, great architectural diversity and favourable location, Pécs is the finest Hungarian city outside of the capital. Pécs, „city of Mediterranean atmosphere” is proud of its sunny climate, bustling city life and rich cultural heritage.

This is where St. Stephen, Hungary's first crowned king founded the Pécs Episcopate in 1009, where King Luis the Great established the first university of the country in 1367, and where Bishop György Klimó opened Hungary's first public library in 1774.

This is where, in 2000, early Christian cemeteries dating back to the 4th century were registered as a UNESCO World Heritage Site. The city has been selected to be the 2010 European Capital of Culture, sharing the title with Essen and Istanbul.

Pécs is a place where people, languages and cultures meet in a peaceful everyday life.
